

Inspiration early 2022

A San Jose Mercury News magazine provided ideas about walkway surface (crushed granite?), drought resistant plants, spaces, and recreation.

Find inner peace in a purposeful meander through a labyrinth

BY JOAN MORRIS

When the pandemic descended across the globe, sending people into isolation and raising blood pressures everywhere, Lars Howlett's phone began ringing. And ringing. And ringing. Howlett, one of the nation's foremost labyrinth makers and facilitators, was getting calls from people suddenly desperate for a labyrinth experience. "I had more calls that year than in the five years before," Howlett says. "People are looking for ways to find order in this time of chaos." Order in chaos is exactly what a labyrinth is all about. It's a path that winds and meanders from one point on the edge of the labyrinth to the center and Drip irrigation reaches every new plant to help it get established, but is still much less than before.

Nik and his wife Spomenka forwarded two suggestions, with this comment:

As far as I know only Boxleaf design does big jobs.
